Democratic Secretary of State candidate to visit Wabash

Desteny Wells will be the Wabash County Democratic Party's guest speaker Jan. 27

By ROB BURGESS

Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

A Democratic candidate for Indiana Secretary of State will be visiting Wabash later this month.

Desteny Wells will be the guest speaker at the Wabash

County Democratic Party's monthly meeting at 6 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 27 at Wings Etc., 1439 N. Cass St., in the events room, said chair Chad Harris.

Harris said the meeting will be held both in-person and via Zoom for party members. Wells, an attorney and military combat veteran, officially entered the race Thursday, Jan. 6.

The Indiana Democratic Party's state convention will be held on June 18.

Wells said she plans to immediately pressure Indiana's Republican legislature on "some of the country's most restrictive voting laws, like Indiana's 29-day voter registration deadline, and to advocate against the Bureau of Motor Vehicles' (BMV) practice of selling Hoosier's personal information to third parties."

"As one of the first states to enact a voter ID law that has strict government-issued photo ID requirements, many Hoosiers rely on providing a driver's license purchased through the BMV to exercise their right to vote," said Wells.

Wells said she believes this is "leading to the commoditization of elections."

Manchester University is honoring the legacy of its former Administration Building with a remembrance ceremony at noon Friday, Jan. 21.

The service will be live-streamed on Manchester's end. Classes there ended in 2012 when modern spaces became available.

The remaining offices in the building closed in 2019 after bricks fell from a section of the facade and a major leak was discovered in the roof. The Manchester Chime bells were removed in August. The Board of Trustees voted in November to raze the building.

"The decision to take down the building was emotionally difficult and made with deep sadness," said President Dave McFadden. "In fact, the Board of Trustees wrestled with this decision – in some form or fashion – over the course of three decades."

Razing the building was first seriously considered in the early 1990s, when Oakwood and Helman halls were built to replace two

Primaries heat up as filing continues

Wabash County Councilmember Lorissa Sweet challenging Rep. Dan Leonard for his seat

and BRETT STOVER

The local races for the upcoming primary elections are heating up as the filing period continues.

The filing period runs through noon Friday, Feb. 4. The primary election will be held May 3 and the general election will be held on Nov. 8.

On Thursday, Jan. 6, Rep. Dan Leonard, R-Huntington, filed his paperwork and awaits a contested primary against challenger, and current Wabash County councilmember, Lorissa Sweet.

Leonard pointed to his record when making the case for another term.

"We've been so fortunate over the last few years to get some pretty sizable projects up in Northeast Indiana, and in the 50th house district," Leonard said. "One I'm particularly proud of is the 900 Road project between 24 and 69, there in front of the General Motors plant. I was able to secure about $30 million to get that project done."

Additionally, Leonard cited helping the region receive grants from the REDI program for around $50 million.

"I'd like to think I'm being fairly effective," Leonard said. "I enjoy what I'm doing, and would like to continue for another two years. That's why I filed."

He also responded to a recent Facebook post made by Sweet, who plans to run for the seat he currently holds in the 50th District.

In the post, Sweet wrote that "Citizens are tired of not being represented, and freedom-loving people are stepping up. Get educated on how your representative is voting. You would be surprised how 'liberal' these 'conservatives' vote."

"You learn from being in politics that you don't get 100 percent of what you want all the time. There has to be some give and take. I like to think that I am extremely conservative; most of my friends think I am way on the conservative side," Leonard said. "But I also understand that when you want to accomplish something,

For current students, the second semester of the school year has just begun.

But, for parents of area preschool aged-children, it already means that it's already time to think about registration for the next school year.

"Believe it or not, it is already time to begin enrollment for the 2022-2023 Little Norse and Little Knights Preschool programs," said MSD director of communication and community engagement Laura Langebartels.

Langebartels said children who will be either ages 3 or 4 by Aug. 1 are eligible to enroll "in these fantastic and affordable early childhood education programs."

Langebartels said MSD's have been recognized by the state "for achieving the highest quality standards," as demonstrated by their Paths To Quality Level 3 rating.

U.S. plans $50B wildfire fight where forests meet suburbia

By MATTHEW BROWN
Associated Press

BILLINGS, Mont. — The Biden administration plans to significantly expand efforts to stave off catastrophic wildfires that have torched areas of the U.S. West by more aggressively thinning forests around areas called "hotspots" where nature and neighborhoods collide.

As climate change heats up and dries out the West, administration officials said they have crafted a $50 billion plan to more than double the use of controlled fires and logging to reduce trees and other vegetation that serves as tinder in the most at-risk areas.

They said work will begin this year and the plan will focus on regions where out-of-control blazes have wiped out neighborhoods and sometimes entire communities — including California's Sierra Nevada mountains, the east side of the Rocky Mountains in Colorado, and portions of Arizona, Oregon and Washington state. Homes keep getting built in fire-prone areas, even as conditions that stoke blazes get worse.

"You're going to have forest fires. The question is how catastrophic do those fires have to be," Agriculture Sec. Tom Vilsack told the Associated Press in advance of a planned public announcement of the administration's wildfire strategy at a Tuesday event in Phoenix.

"The time to act is now if we want to ultimately over time change the trajectory of these fires," Vilsack said.

Specific projects weren't immediately released, and it's not clear who would pay for the full scope of work envisioned across almost 80,000 square miles — an area almost as large as Idaho. Much of that area is privately owned or controlled by states or tribes.

Reaching that goal would require an estimated $20 billion over 10 years for work on national forests and $30 billion for work on other federal, state, tribal and private lands, said Vilsack spokesperson Kate Waters.

Vilsack acknowledged that the new effort will also require a "paradigm shift" within the U.S. Forest Service, from an agency devoted to stamping out fires, into one that uses what some Native Americans call "good fire" on forests and rangeland to prevent even larger blazes.

Forest Service planning documents indicate the work will focus on "hotspots" that make up only 10 percent of the fire-prone areas across the U.S. but account for 80 percent of risk to communities because of their population densities and locations.

The recently-passed federal infrastructure bill put a down payment on the initiative — $3.2 billion over five years that Vilsack said will get work going quickly.

Wildfire expert John Abatzoglou said lessening fire dangers on the amount of land envisioned under the administration's plan is a "lofty goal" that represents even more acreage than burned over the past 10 years across the West. But Abatzoglou, a University of California Merced engineering professor, said the focus on wildfire hazards closest to communities makes sense.

"Our scorecard for fire should be about lives saved rather than acres that didn't burn," he said.

Dealing with western wildfires is becoming increasingly urgent as they get more destructive and intense. There have been rare winter blazes in recent weeks, including infernos in Montana and Colorado, where a wildfire on Dec. 30 tore through a suburban area and destroyed more than 1,000 buildings, leaving one person dead and a second still missing.

And there's no signs of a let-up in conditions that keep the risk of wildfires extremely high. A long-term "megadrought" is gripping the region and scientists forecast temperatures will keep rising as more climate-changing carbon emissions are pumped into the atmosphere.

The impact stretches far beyond the western U.S. because massive smoke plumes at the height of wildfire season in the U.S. and Canada spread the health effects across North America.

ca — sending unhealthy pollution last summer to major cities from San Francisco to Philadelphia and Toronto.

For decades the primary approach to containing and extinguishing forest fires was to try to stamp them out. The efforts have been similar to massive, military-like campaigns, including planes, fleets of heavy equipment and thousands of firefighting personnel and support workers dispatched to the fire zones.

However, fires are a part of the natural cycle for most forests, so putting them out leaves stands of trees that don't burn surrounded by dead wood, underbrush and other highly flammable fuels — a worst-case scenario when blazes ignite.

Critics have said U.S. agencies are too fixated on fighting fires and that trying to solve the problem by cutting more trees will only harm the forests. In South Dakota's Black Hills, for example, government biologists have said that too many trees dying from a combination of insects, fire and logging have made current timber harvest levels unsustainable.

But Vilsack said a combination of tree thinning and intentionally set fires to clear undergrowth that are called prescribed burns will make the forests healthier in the long run while reducing the threat to public safety.

Forests thinned near Lake Tahoe and its tourism gateway community of South Lake Tahoe were credited with slowing the advance of the massive Caldor Fire last summer that destroyed almost 800 homes and prompted evacuations of tens of thousands of residents and tourists.

A similar phenomenon played out during Oregon's Bootleg fire last July, which burned more than 600 square miles but did less damage in forest that was thinned over the past decade.

"We know this works," Vilsack said. "It's removing some of the timber, in a very scientific and thoughtful way, so that at the end of the day fires don't continue to hop from tree top to tree top, but eventually come to ground where we can put them out."

outdated residence halls. In 2009, the trustees voted to replace the Administration Building with a smaller, more functional building as part of the Students First! campaign. Given evolving needs, however, it was decided that using a $5.4 million gift from the late Herb Chinworth to build the Lockie and Augustus Chinworth Center would better serve students.

Security fencing now surrounds the empty Administration Building, and interior demolition work is already underway. After the building is gone, the area will be maintained as a green space featuring Manchester's beloved fountain as its focal point, surrounded by benches and mature oak trees.

For Oath Keepers and founder, Jan. 6 was weeks in the making

By COLLEEN LONG

Associated Press

WILMINGTON, Del. — Two days after the election on Nov. 3, 2020, the Oath Keepers were already convinced that victory had been stolen from President Donald Trump and members of the far-right militia group were making plans to march on the U.S. Capitol.

"We aren't getting through this without a civil war," the group's leader, Stewart Rhodes, wrote fellow members, according to court documents. "Too late for that. Prepare your mind, body, spirit."

Four days later, when The Associated Press and other news outlets declared Democrat Joe Biden the winner, the documents say Rhodes told Oath Keepers to "refuse to accept it and march en-masse on the nation's Capitol."

The indictment last week of Rhodes, the leader of the Oath Keepers, and 10 other members or associates was stunning in part because federal prosecutors, after a year of investigating the insurrection of Jan. 6, 2021, charged them with seditious conspiracy, a rarely-used Civil War-era statute reserved for only the most serious of political criminals.

But the documents also show how quickly Trump's most fervent and dangerous supporters mobilized to subvert the election results through force and violence, even though there was no widespread election fraud and Trump's Cabinet and local election officials said the vote had been free and fair.

Hundreds of people have been charged in the violent effort to stop the congressional certification of Biden's victory. Many were animated by Trump's speech at a rally near the White House, just before the riot, where he said: "We fight like hell. And if you don't fight like hell, you're not going to have a country anymore."

But for Rhodes and others, there was no need for Trump's words of encouragement. Action was already planned.

Elmer Stewart Rhodes III,

56, founded the Oath Keepers in 2009. He and some friends decided they would form an organization around the perception of "imminent tyranny," concerned about federal overreach and a series of unrecognized threats, like the government was planning to attack its own citizens. He recruited current and former military, police and first responders.

Rhodes, out of high school, joined the Army and became a paratrooper, but was honorably discharged after he was injured during a night parachuting accident, according to a biography on the Southern Poverty Law Center's website on extremism.

He went to night school at the University of Nevada in Las Vegas. His first job in politics was supervising interns for Ron Paul, who was then a Republican congressman from Texas. Rhodes later went to Yale Law School, graduating in 2004 and clerking for Arizona Supreme Court Justice Michael Ryan.

Rhodes moved to Montana and relocated his defense practice there but took a "hard right turn away from politics" the SPLC said, and launched the Oath Keepers.

He has said there were about 40,000 Oath Keepers at its peak; one extremism expert estimates the group's membership stands at about 3,000 nationally. Before long, Rhodes was neglecting his law practice to work on the Oath Keepers. He was disbarred in 2015.

Members pledge to "fulfill the oath all military and police take to 'defend the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic,'" and to defend the Constitution, according to its website.

Their motto: "Not on our watch!"

The Oath Keepers engaged in a series of confrontations with the government during years of Barack Obama's presidency. The most notable was an armed standoff against the federal government at Bundy Ranch in Bunkerville, Nevada.

Then Trump was elected in 2016. While Rhodes insisted the Oath Keepers were nonpartisan, they came to the nation's capital in January 2017, when Trump took office, to protect peaceful "American patriots" from "radical leftists."

"During this time, Rhodes became increasingly conspiratorial, adopting and peddling a number of fringe right-wing conspiracy theories with the assistance of his friend Alex Jones," according to the book "Oath Keepers: Patriotism and the Edge of Violence in a Right-Wing Antigovernment Group," by University at Albany assistant professor Sam Jackson. Jones is a conspiracy theorist and Infowars host.

When it looked like Trump was going to lose the 2020 presidential election to Biden, the Oath Keepers got to work, prosecutors said.

On Nov. 9, 2020, Rhodes instructed his followers during a GoToMeeting call to go to Washington to let Trump know "that the people are behind him," and he expressed hope that Trump would call up the militia to help stay in power, authorities say.

"It will be a bloody and desperate fight," Rhodes warned. "We are going to have a fight. That can't be avoided."

The Oath Keepers worked as if they were going to war, discussing weapons and training.

Days before the attack on the Capitol, one defendant suggested in a text message getting a boat to ferry weapons across the Potomac River to their "waiting arms," prosecutors say.

On Dec. 14, 2020, as the electors in the states cast their votes, Rhodes published a letter on the Oath Keepers' website "advocating for the use of force to stop the lawful transfer of presidential power," according to the documents.

The Oath Keepers engaged in a series of confrontations with the government during years of Barack Obama's presidency. The most notable was an armed standoff against the federal government at Bundy Ranch in Bunkerville, Nevada.

Then Trump was elected in 2016. While Rhodes insisted the Oath Keepers were nonpartisan, they came to

"Everyone coming has their own technical equipment and knows how to use it," wrote Edward Vallejo, who also was charged in the conspiracy.

Oath Keepers staged the guns in hotels just outside of the District of Columbia. Rhodes said they were "QRFs" – military-speak for quick reaction force, according to court papers.

On the morning of Jan. 6, 2021, Vallejo and others were on a podcast discussing the possibility of armed conflict. Members turned up wearing camouflaged combat attire and in helmets. They entered the Capitol with the large crowds of rioters who stormed past police barriers and smashed windows, injuring dozens of officers and sending lawmakers running.

The indictment against Rhodes alleges Oath Keepers formed two teams, or "stacks," a military term.

The first stack split up inside the building to separately go after the House and Senate. The second stack confronted officers inside the Capitol Rotunda, the indictment said.

Other Trump supporters were getting in the fray, too.

The building was breached. The congressional certification had stopped. Rumors circulated that the left-wing antifa had breached the seat of American democracy.

"Nope. I'm right here, these are Patriots," Rhodes wrote to his leadership group in a secure chat.

"All I see Trump doing is complaining," Rhodes wrote, according to prosecutors. "I see no attempt by him to do anything. So the patriots are taking it in their own hands. They've had enough."

One of the stacks hunted for House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., but could not find her. Members of Congress were cowering in fear and Pelosi had been sent to a secure location. The siege continued for hours, until law enforcement finally gained control.

"We are acting like the founding fathers" one wrote in the throes of the melee. "Can't stand down."

Others came prepared, too.

Lawmakers consider easing of nursing school rules

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A proposed loosening of Indiana's regulations on nursing education programs is advancing in the Legislature, with supporters saying the step is needed to help address a statewide nursing shortage.

Hospital officials and health care organizations supporting the proposal have told legislators that thousands of nursing jobs are open across the state in a shortage exacerbated during the COVID-19 pandemic as some nurses have quit or taken part-time jobs, the Indianapolis Business Journal reported.

The Indiana House could vote in the coming days on approving the bill that would nursing schools to increase enrollment and hire more part-time instructors. A committee voted unanimously last week to endorse the proposal.

Ivy Tech Community College, which graduates about 1,300 nurses a year, said it had to turn down 300 qualified students last year because it didn't have enough spots open.

Community Health Network, with a staff of 5,000 nurses and hospitals in Indianapolis, Anderson and Kokomo, is trying to fill about 600 nursing positions, said Jean Putnam, the system's chief nursing officer. She said hospitals and nursing homes across the state have some 4,000 nursing jobs open.

"I have never seen this type of vacancy rate in my career," Putnam told the legislative committee.

The bill would allow nursing programs that have been operating for five years or longer and have an 80 percent or higher rate of students passing the state licensing exam to increase enrollment at any rate they deem appropriate, rather people in the United States, conspire to "overthrow, put down, or to destroy by force" the government, or to levy war against it, or to oppose by force and try to prevent the execution of any law.

That's in part because such charges are rarely used and hard to win. The last time U.S. prosecutors brought a sedition conspiracy case was in 2010 in an alleged Michigan plot by members of the Hutaree militia to incite an uprising against the government. But a judge ordered acquittals on the sedition conspiracy charges at a probe.

Other cracks in the group are showing. Before his arrest, Rhodes sought to distance himself from those who have been arrested, insisting the members went rogue and there was never a plan to enter the Capitol.

Court documents show discord among the group as early as the night of the attack. Someone identified in the records only as "Person Eleven" blasted the group "a huge f—n joke" and called Rhodes "the dumba—I heard you were," court documents say.

After the riot, the North Carolina Oath Keepers branch said it was splitting from Rhodes' group. Its president told The News Reporter newspaper it wouldn't be "a part of anything that terrorizes anybody or goes against law enforcement."

A leader of an Arizona chapter also slammed Rhodes and those facing charges, saying on CBS' "60 Minutes" that the attack "goes against everything we've ever taught, everything we believe in."

The Oath Keepers are having money troubles, too. The group lost the ability to process credit card payments online after the company demanded that Rhodes disavow the arrested members and he refused, Rhodes said in a March interview for far-right website Gateway Pundit.

People are instructed instead to mail in applications and dues.

For a long time it didn't look as though Rhodes would be charged. More than a dozen of his members were arrested on conspiracy accusations, and Rhodes was referred to in their indictments as "Person One."

But as the months wore on it seemed increasingly unlikely anyone would face anything more serious like sedition — when two or more

"This is entirely speculation on my part, but perhaps Rhodes felt like he would no longer get the attention that he needed if he continued to be moderate and had to become more inflammatory in his rhetoric," he said.

FILING

sometimes you have to make some compromises. There is a particular faction of people that refuse to compromise. In the General Assembly, you see those people day in and day out getting absolutely nothing done. I think it is necessary to be able to sit down and talk with people, reason with people and work to get the best solution you can. It's not always 100 percent of what you want, but if you can get 80 percent of what you want, it's a lot better than getting nothing."

On Tuesday, Jan. 18, Sweet said the Facebook post in question was from, "Inside Sources," discussing the "uprising of patriots throughout the state of Indiana, who are fed up with complacent incumbents."

"These patriots are filing to run for office, in order to challenge them. They are tired of not being represented," said Sweet. "The article included an interview with myself, where I stated, 'Dan Leonard has had the opportunity to hear bills in his committee and he has killed them every single time. For me, that is a big deal.' I was referring to the multiple bills sent to his committee, which would have ended the state of emergency, limited the governor's powers, and put the power back into the hands of the legislature, where it belongs. The governor's "emergency" has now been renewed 22 times.

Leonard is currently the gatekeeper to hear these bills in his committee and on the floor, and he is refusing. Leonard stated in response that he is willing to compromise on this. He is willing to take less for our district. I personally think the voters are tired of compromise, and he has lost touch with the families living here."

Sweet said she would not "compromise your freedoms."

"Eighty percent is not enough for me," said Sweet. "I want more for us, and I intend to tell Indianapolis exactly what we want. I won't compromise your kids, your health freedom, your school choice, your constitutional rights, and your individual liberties, like Leonard is doing. I want more for you."

Sweet said it was "great" that Leonard continues to tout that he has brought so much money to northeast Indiana, "but what did he do for the small business owners that were shut down, because they were considered non-essential?"

"What has he done for the children, who are still being masked in schools? What did he do for employees, who were being forced to take the jab, in order to keep their jobs? What is he doing to fight for freedom and the Constitution? I believe these are the things that voters truly care about because that's what they are telling me," said Sweet. "They are concerned about their loss of freedoms and 80 percent is not enough for them. Compromise is what has gotten us here. When it comes to freedom, there's no room for compromise. That's why I'm running for District 50."

In response, Leonard this was "typical lingo" and he "knew it was coming."

"We accept federal funding based on having the state under a state of health emergency that's declared by the governor. If we - for example, the bill that came to my committee - if we did away with the state of health emergency, we would put 500,000 Hoosiers out of Medicaid. We would put 250,000 Hoosiers out of HIP 2.0 health insurance. We would reduce the income we get from the federal government by $400 million and do away with $44 million in Medicaid subsidies. Now, if that's being unresponsive to the people in Indiana, I'm sorry - I think that there are things that we have to consider when we talk about a health emergency. If we did away with the health emergency tomorrow, what's going to change your life? I don't like it, but at the same time if we did away with the health emergency tomorrow, your life wouldn't change other than we would lose all of the federal help that we're getting in Indiana."

Leonard said he's currently working on passing a bill in the Indiana General Assembly that allows the state to continue to receive the funds without the state of emergency, allowing the governor to end it. "I think it's a much more responsible way to proceed than send a bill to the rules committee and pass it and do away with everything we get from the federal government. I don't know that she has any concept of that. I've served on the Ways and Means Committee for 16 years, and that's where my forte is. I understand how the money flows to the state of Indiana," said Leonard.

Leonard cited the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) loans, the canceling of the unemployment waiting period, putting hundreds of millions of dollars of federal money into the unemployment system. "There were funds flowing all over. I don't know how you could say that's not responsive," said Leonard. "I can tell you that I held a seven-and-a-half hour hearing on a preliminary draft and then sat through a seven-and-a-half hour hearing in the Labor Committee. If you look ... in the House calendar, you will see House Bill 1001 - it's the number one priority bill for the House of Representatives - that deals with vaccine mandates. How is that being unresponsive? ... There are so many things going on. You can pick at one issue all you want, but I think I can justify everything that we've done here because I work on it all the time."

Fiance's lady friends pose big problem for his intended

DEAR ABBY: My fiance, "Peter," has a number of female friends I'm not comfortable with, primarily because they are women he "had" interest in before we started dating.

He says he has told them he's taken now and they can't be more than friends, but I don't think they got the message. He recently told me one of them told him a guy had proposed to her but she's delaying accepting in case Peter becomes available. This is the second time something like this has happened.

I believe it's because of the way he relates to these girls. I mean, if he has really made clear in words and actions that he's not interested in them romantically, they wouldn't base their life decisions on the hope that they may still have a chance with him.

Peter may tell me these things because he wants me to know lots of women are willing to have him. But I'm confused at this point about whether he's truly committed to me. Could it be he just likes "talking" to women even though it leads them on? And is this behavior healthy for a future marriage? — Second Thoughts

DEAR SECOND THOUGHTS: You are asking intelligent questions. Unfortunately, not knowing your fiance, I can't answer them. I can, however, offer this: When couples become serious, they stop playing games. If your fiance thinks that causing you to feel jealous or insecure at this point is constructive, he is making a mistake because it won't stop after the wedding. Peter appears to be immature, and that's a red flag. Premarital counseling may help to clear the air.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married for 28 years. I thought we were very happy for the first 25. The change came when our children all left home. We sold our large house, which I was more than willing to do. But the house we have moved into causes me a lot of anxiety because of the traffic noise. My husband is very forceful about his "right" to choose where we live. He has insisted that the next move is also his choice and has already purchased the land. He claims he has provided for others all these years, and now it's his turn to get what he wants.

Abby, I raised the children, I still have a job and I contribute to every aspect of home life. Although I love him with all my heart, I wonder if I'd be better off throwing in the towel. He refuses to go to counseling, but I have gone, to help with my anxiety. After three years in this new home, I don't see any sign he will change his ways. I have tried talking to him about choosing something different together and moving, but he won't do it. Help! — Back Up Against The Wall

DEAR BACK: I can't change your husband's attitude and, apparently, neither can you. I'm glad you have been seeing a therapist, because it's time to schedule more appointments. Your therapist will help you to decide whether you can continue living with someone who refuses to recognize your contributions to the marriage and who has such a controlling, authoritarian attitude.

You have decisions to make that should not be taken lightly or decided while you are emotional. You deserve peace of mind and an equal voice about where you choose to live.

Keep the fight going to protect voting rights

It's coming down to the wire for democracy in the United States.

The next insurrection won't come from crowds trying to breach the halls of power, but those working within them. Voting rights and election integrity are under assault in several states where Republican legislatures last year enacted an unprecedented number of restrictive laws to suppress voting and undermine elections. More such laws are in the works this year.

The best hope for the health and longevity of our democratic institutions is for Congress to pass the Freedom to Vote Act and the John Lewis Voting Rights Advancement Act. Together these important bills will protect against the erosion of trust in elections and ensure that American democracy does not perish from the earth.

The John Lewis Voting Rights Advancement Act would restore and strengthen a provision of the 1965 Voting Rights Act that required states with a history of racial discrimination in voting to pre-clear changes in election procedures with the U.S. Justice Department or a federal court. And many of the provisions in the Freedom to Vote Act – early voting, vote by mail, automatic voter registration and independent redistricting – have been used successfully in California and other states to strengthen voter participation.

More important, it would set standards on basic voter access and stop efforts in states to subvert the election process.

But passing this legislation is now looking like an impossible feat. Though congressional Republicans have supported voting rights in the past, they have made it clear they aren't interested now. They either don't see the threat from the deluge of restrictions at the state level, or don't care.

Democrats alone have been left with the responsibility to act in defense of democracy. The House has done its part by passing voting rights bills. But the effort has stalled in the Senate – where the Democrats have control only through Vice President Kamala Harris' tie-breaking vote – and may well be doomed.

Frustratingly, while Senate Democrats have the votes to pass these essential bills, but they don't have enough to call a vote. It's absurd but the Senate's filibuster rule requires 60 votes in order to advance legislation. Senate Majority Leader Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.) had said he would consider suspending the filibuster by Monday if Republicans continue to block a vote on voting rights legislation. (Which we support – this obstructive and anti-democratic tool has turned the Senate into a place where good legislation goes to die and ought to be put down permanently.)

rights bills, are refusing to remove the filibuster to pass them. It's beyond infuriating that these two are prepared to support an obscure Senate rule that most people don't care about over the fate of the nation.

It's not entirely fair that Sinema and Manchin have become the villains of the moment. Indeed, that label belongs to every Republican senator too craven and fearful of a political backlash to stand up for what they must know is the best course of action. As unfair as it may be to Democrats, any Republican who breaks ranks with their party to support the passage of voting protections would likely go down in the history books as American heroes.

We could use some political heroism right now. There's so much more at stake than the next election. In just the first few months of 2021, 148 bills were proposed in dozens of states that would allow state legislatures to "politicize, criminalize or interfere with elections," according to a report by a trio of nonpartisan organizations that support democracy. Hundreds more were filed in the months since. In a speech about voting rights Wednesday, President Biden referenced a recent law passed in Georgia that prohibits the distribution of food or water to people waiting in line to vote. "That's not America," he said.

Well, not yet. But it may be in the near future. The effort to pass laws to suppress voting or subvert elections continues. Here are some of the bad ideas being proposed: inserting people aligned with a political party into the election review process and empowering state legislatures to overturn presidential election results even after certification by election officials. It requires little imagination to envision how these new laws may be used to thwart outcomes that the party in power doesn't like. Even if these new laws aren't used nefariously, they will further whittle down the public's trust in elections. If people don't trust that elections are fair and accurate (and many already don't) our democracy will be lost.

For all the rhetoric, the voting reforms proposed by Democrats and backed by scholars who support strong democratic institutions, aren't revolutionary. They would ensure that Americans in all states would have voting rights protections.

"This is one of the moments that will be remembered in history books," said Wendy Weiser, who directs the Democracy Program at the Brennan Center for Justice. "Did we save democracy or let it go down the tubes?"

President Biden and Schumer have vowed to keep fighting to protect voting rights. They must do so as long as there's a chance to save our democracy.

Kremlin's heinous war crimes against civilians

On Jan. 20, one of our closest allies, the Republic of Azerbaijan, is marking the 32nd anniversary of one of the most heinous massacres committed against its people by the Soviet troops. The mass killing of more than 130 civilians in the city of Baku more than three decades ago became the grand event, which cracked the foundations of our adversary – the Soviet regime.

To crush the voices of Azerbaijan and suppress the emerging voices of democracy, on the night of Jan. 19 to 20, 1990, Moscow sent 26,000 Soviet troops to brutally invade Azerbaijan. By the morning hours of Jan. 20, after an armed attack against unarmed people, 140 civilians lay dead on the streets of the city, and more would be killed in the following days.

We must speak out against Kremlin's war crimes, perpetrated three decades ago, now and in the future.

Americans are quietly realizing Dr. King's vision

This weekend we set aside time to remember Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and reflect upon his influence. Classrooms around the country will replay some of his speeches, and students together will read his "Letter from a Birmingham Jail."

It is necessary that they do so, and no Americans can count themselves as truly educated who have not read much of his most popular arguments.

King's words are part of the canon of American political writing, and belong to a long tradition of Enlightenment thought. His best belongs in the same intellectual anthology as that of Jefferson,

Lincoln and Thomas Paine. The essence of the American aspirations towards freedom can be understood by cobbling together just a few paragraphs from Paine's "Rights of Man," Jefferson's second paragraph of the "Declaration of Independence."

Lincoln's "Gettysburg Address" and "Second Inaugural Address," along with King's "Letter from a Birmingham Jail" and "I Have a Dream" speech.

Few readers likely experience

the same misty-eyed affection for these words as do I. But, they cannot help but move even the most cynical observer of the American experience. Even an hour spent reading these words might allow us to better appreciate one another as we go about building a more perfect union.

Recent years have been difficult on the perception of growing racial comity and justice that nearly all Americans hoped would mark the passage of time. Sadly, it is difficult to write about race, in part because so many minefields have been set by people of bad faith. Moreover, there are too many gatekeepers to debate, when it is a subject for all of us. Happily, this column is not about race. It is about the decisions of individual Americans as they construct the building blocks of our Republic and our economy.

A vibrant and growing economy is a tender thing, which can be readily disrupted by a lack of trust and goodwill. Trade, employment, capital investment and the purchase of goods through a lengthy supply chain all rely upon extensive trust. As I have noted before, the opposite of war is not peace, it is trade. Peace demands nothing of us but the temporary suppression of violence. Trade between people demands trust, cooperation, and interdependence. These are more difficult, but enduring, demands upon our humanity.

History provides no example of long-term economic success built upon any other social and political system than that which places the individual first. Thus, political philosophies that elevate race, gender, creed or other identity above the individual are ultimately incompatible with a successful economy. For every direction, our political discourse is increasingly filled with voices that value group identity over the individual. Ultimately, these ideas will fail here, not least because of the ongoing decisions of ordinary Americans about the ways in which they organize their lives.

A look at demographic data suggests the American people are moving along with addressing racial issues at our own quick pace. Stark inequality still exists in many places, along with abundant issues to think and act upon. But, the trend is almost universally positive, towards more acceptance and opportunity.

As one small example, today Black women attend college at higher rates than White men. Few listening to King's "I Have a Dream Speech" in 1963 would've imagined that. Of course, this might usher in different equity issues, particularly around gender, but I'll save that for another column.

The data that most astounds me is the explosive growth in mixed-race marriages and children. For fairly obvious reasons, this is the most telling component of our nation's integration story. In 1967, the year before Martin Luther King was assassinated, racial intermarriage was illegal in some states. That year, Loving vs. Virginia ended miscegenation laws. Demographers have estimated that in 1967, some 3.0 percent of new marriages were of mixed race.

By 2015, more than one in six newlyweds and one in 10 of all marriages were of mixed race. This trend is accelerating and is substantially more pronounced among better-educated adults. Some of this increase is due to individuals identifying themselves as multiracial.

Still, it represents a significant shift in behavior of families and communities.

This phenomenon is not linked solely to race. Interfaith marriage rose from one in five in the 1960s

Employers are on their own after court guts Biden vaccine-or-testing mandate

By BOB FERNANDEZ
and JOSEPH N. DISTEFANO
The Philadelphia Inquirer (TNS)

With the U.S. Supreme Court blocking the Biden administration's vaccine mandate for private companies, employers now face a patchwork of state rules on COVID-19 workplace safety.

Different, and sometimes confusing, vaccine rules now apply across the economy based on the city, sector, funding source, and corporate policy.

"There isn't a right answer for employers at this point," said Shannon Farmer, an attorney at Ballard Spahr in Philadelphia.

She said the U.S. Supreme Court's action on Thursday to freeze the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's vaccine-or-test mandates, could pit a company's human relations staffers who want to protect the health of employees against operating executives who worry how internal vaccine mandates could cause employees to quit.

John S. Ho, co-chair of OSHA-Workplace Safety Practice at Cozen O'Connor, said that companies can "essentially ignore" the Biden vaccine mandate, though the issue will be litigated in the lower federal courts. "It's not over yet but employers don't have to worry about it. So folks are left with different state and city rules."

On Friday, Philadelphia Mayor Jim Kenney's administration set a Jan. 24 date for implementing a vaccination mandate for city workers after reaching a deal with one of the city's unions. The city has 22,000 unionized employees and they will be required to show proof of vaccination or obtain an exemption for religious or medical reasons.

National employers including American Express, BlackRock, General Electric, Google, MGM International, Comcast's NBC Universal, and Southwest Airlines are requiring vaccines for workers at their locations, according to a list compiled by NBC News.

At least 1.8 million Philly-area workers fall under Biden vaccination, testing mandate.

CVS and McDonald's are requiring higher-paid office and professional staff, but not hourly-paid retail workers, to get the shots.

American Airlines, one of the largest private employers in Philadelphia, said on Friday that it was subject to a totally different mandate, one for federal contractors.

"We shared last week that more than 96 percent of our team members have submitted proof of vaccination or a request for an accommodation. This is great news, and we continue to see submissions every day," a spokesperson said in an email on Friday.

But Farmer, the Ballard Spahr attorney, said that in a separate and earlier decision the courts had stayed, or frozen, the mandates for federal contractors as it did on Thursday for the OSHA vaccine mandate.

The Supreme Court's ruling

In its ruling, the Supreme Court said that the Biden administration and OSHA had exceeded their authority, in an attempt "to regulate public health more broadly" than Congress had authorized.

The justices, however, let stand a separate vaccine mandate covering 10 million health-care workers who treat patients in the federally funded Medicare and Medicaid programs.

The vote in the vaccine mandate case was 6 to 3, with the liberal justices in opposition. The health care case split was 5 to 4, with Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. and Justice Brett M. Kavanaugh joining the liberal justices.

The court majority explained the distinction it drew this way: COVID-19 is not an occupational hazard as it spreads at home, in schools, at sports games, and where people get together. As such, OSHA, the federal workplace safety agency, is not authorized under federal law to protect broadly against it.

But the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services has a responsibility to protect the patients at facilities funded by federal health dollars and can enact regulations to ensure patient safety such as vaccinations for nurses and doctors against COVID-19.

"The key issue in both cases was neither whether vaccine mandates are beneficial nor whether people have a right to refuse them. Rather, the issue was whether Congress had given the agencies the power to impose the mandates," said Michael R. Dimino, law professor at Widener University Commonwealth Law School.

Business lobbyists had complained about the cost of the measure, which would affect over 80 million workers, including 1.8 million in the Philly area, at firms employing 100 or more workers.

In applauding the decision, Leslie Sarasin, president of the Food Marketing Institute, one of 10 employer groups that sued to block the requirement, said that the food sector would find itself grappling with an even more acute worker shortage on top of the other economic distortions brought on by the health crisis.

The high court "recognized the challenges the federal rule would have imposed on food retailers and manufacturers, our employees and, ultimately, American consumers," Sarasin said.

Suspending federal enforcement "will help ensure the food industry is able to continue meeting our customers' needs as efficiently and effectively as possible amid the ongoing supply chain and labor disruptions," Sarasin added in a statement.

A local labor leader disagreed. "It would have been really good if the [OSHA policy] had been put into effect, with everybody following the same standard," said Wendell Young IV, head of UFCW Local 1776, which represents 35,000 supermarket, pharmacy, and food factory workers in Pennsylvania and a few neighboring areas.

The OSHA requirement set a national standard that took pressure off individual employers to do the right thing even when it was unpopular, he added.

Young said some big employers have been planning, in the absence of a federal rule, to step up vaccination and testing requirements, and to pay sick employees to stay home under quarantine rather than risk sickening more workers.

He cited Tyson Foods and JBS, the meatpacking giant, among the large employers who had agreed to encourage vaccination and testing, even before the Biden policy was announced last year.

Young said 90 percent of workers at the JBS plant in Souderton were vaccinated after the death of a union shop steward, Enock Benjamin, early in the pandemic — a higher level than in surrounding, affluent Montgomery County.

"In the more rural areas, some employees aren't taking it as seriously, as well as some of our members," Young admitted. "But they are taking it seriously where they see the impact on management's ability to run the plant" as sick workers called out. Young said management at the Cargill and Hershey plants in Hazle Township, Luzerne County, among others, are negotiating tougher anti-virus rules.

The largest U.S. employer affected by the ruling, Amazon, had no immediate comment on the decision or its impact.

Amazon, whose business has risen rapidly during the pandemic as more people had packages shipped to their homes instead of shopping in stores, employs 1.4 million worldwide, a majority of them in the U.S., including more than 6,000 in the Philadelphia area, the company said.

The company's publicly-posted hiring guidelines state that masks and other protective gear are "available" to all employees and visitors, and people at Amazon plants in recent months have been required to wear masks. But Amazon's posted guidelines include no guidance about vaccines, and a vaccine ID has not been required for entrance to Amazon facilities.

Early barrage by Hanover Panthers subdues Spartans men's basketball on the road, 76-58

Manchester had its four-game win streak snapped on Saturday afternoon

By DILLON BENDER

The league-leading Hanover College Panthers used an early offensive barrage en route to a 76-58 victory over the Manchester University Spartans in men's basketball action on Saturday, Jan. 15.

The Panthers connected on their first 10 field-goal attempts of the game. A 12-0 Hanover run over the game's initial two and a half minutes was broken up by a trio of free throws by senior CJ Hampton, from Hammond and Griffith High School. After Hampton's makes at the charity stripe, Hanover used another 12-0 blitz that saw the Panthers remain unblemished from the field, going 5-5 over the game's next three minutes.

Hanover led 47-28 at the half.

While Hanover cooled off some in the 2nd half, the Panthers still finished Saturday's game shooting 47.6 percent (30-63) from the field. HC also shot 44 percent (11-25) from the perimeter in Saturday's win.

Hoosiers to face Purdue on Thursday

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Trayce Jackson-Davis had 23 points and 12 rebounds for his fourth straight double-double and Indiana defeated Nebraska 78-71 on Monday night, a rare road win for the Hoosiers.

The win was the first on the road for the Hoosiers, who had lost their first four road games this season and eight in a row dating to last season.

Indiana never trailed but the Hoosiers' lead was just 59-55 with 10:31 to go. Jackson-Davis scored the next six points and the Hoosiers matched their largest lead of the game at 65-55.

Nebraska was never down by more than 10 points but in the final 10 minutes the Cornhuskers did not get closer than six until Alonzo Verge Jr.

made a layup with five seconds left to make it 76-71.

Indiana's Xavier Johnson added two free throws for the final margin.

Jackson-Davis, who averages 19.3 ppg and 8.9 rpg, made 10 of 16 shots to help secure his 30th career double-double. Race Thompson scored 12 points and Jordan Geronimo 10 for Indiana (13-4, 4-3 Big Ten).

Bryce McGowens led Nebraska (6-13, 0-8) with 19.

Indiana, which had struggled with ball control recently and had 23 turnovers in last week's loss to Iowa, had only seven turnovers with about 10 minutes to go but finished with 14 giveaways to Nebraska's 13.

No. 4 Purdue defeats No. 17 Illinois in 2 OT

By GAVIN GOOD

Associated Press

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Sasha Stefanovic scored 22 points, including a go-ahead 3 at the start of double overtime that sent No. 4 Purdue over No. 17 Illinois 96-88 on Monday.

Illinois guards Andre Curvelo and Alfonso Plummer made baskets in the final seconds of regulation and the first overtime before the Boilermakers (15-2, 4-2 Big Ten) broke away.

Purdue hit four straight shots to take an 89-83 lead with 1:03 left in double overtime. Eric Hunter Jr.

had two of those baskets.

Stefanovic went 5 of 8 on 3-point tries and also had eight rebounds. His last-second shot from long range fell short as the regulation buzzer sounded.

"They're the best basketball team we've played," Illinois coach Brad Underwood said. "And then I thought Sasha was elite today. We've done a pretty good job on him for the most part the last few years, and today he was the difference."

Plummer led the Illini (13-4, 6-1) with 24 points, shooting 6 of 12 on 3s. His layup with 9 seconds left in the first overtime made it 78-all.

Curvelo, who had missed 11 games after being injured, had 20 points, six rebounds and three assists. His basket with 14 seconds in regulation tied it at 69.

Preparing for post-Roe America

This year may be the last January March for Life. I've attended many of the annual pro-life gatherings in our nation's capital, and it's a sight to behold. There's always a big showing from North Dakota, thanks to the University of Mary in Bismarck. The day before the march, ceptions about the pro-life movement. We don't want to put women in jail. We don't want them to suffer or be alone. All too often, the pressures are too great for a woman to consider anything but abortion. But women are capable of amazing things when they find people who want to support them and help them make the right choice both for themselves and their child. We march for life not only to oppose abortion, but to celebrate the women who have made courageous choices to give life – to mother in challenging circumstances or choose adoption.

But such women and their choices are not supported by our culture – they have to fight every step of the way in our disposable, life-denying culture.

I recently encountered a woman protesting a pro-life prayer vigil outside a Planned Parenthood abortion clinic in New York. Addressed by name, I said good morning to her. She replied: "It is a good morning, because no one is forcing me to give birth." She held a sign in my face about opposing forced birth. But the pro-life people gathered there that morning wanted women not to be pressured in every way to end the lives of their unborn children. We're not about force, but actual freedom.

Abortion is not health care. It's the most intimate violence on a woman and her developing child, who winds up dead in the process. Bills that outlaw abortion if a fetal heartbeat can be detected are instructive because they acknowledge that it is fairly early on in a pregnancy when human life as we think of it develops. As we potentially move toward a post-Roe America, we need to be honest about what we are talking about.

It would seem an impossible plea in these divided times, but could people of good will band together to make sure women know that they have options that are not abortion? It was not all that long ago when a Democratic presidential candidate framed abortion essentially as a necessary evil – there is room for both sides to come together on some points of this issue.

Now is the time to band together to make abortion implausible. The young people holding "We Are the Post-Roe Generation" signs are confident. And the March for Life veterans with the "We Will Help You" signs will show you the pro-life movement in all its compassion for women who deserve better than abortion.

I almost always encounter students from Louisiana at Mass at St. Matthew's Cathedral. Many students spend the night in the basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, some in vigil, others catching some sleep in the side chapels and everywhere else there is space.

The March for Life is on one level a protest of the Supreme Court's Roe v. Wade decision, which legalized abortion in all three trimesters of pregnancy. But, more importantly, it's a celebration of life. Roe was decided on January 22, 1973. If it's overturned by the Supreme Court in June, I'm hoping the march will move to that summer month and transition to a gathering of thanksgiving. And there will still be many reasons to take a stand against abortion, as the procedure will likely remain legal in many states.

There are all kinds of caricatures and miscon-

Little Norse at Metro North Elementary, experience the benefits of access to meal programs and health services," said Langebartels.

Langebartels said children in the 4-year-old program will have access to special classes such as art, music and physical education.

"These students have the option of riding the school bus as well, and are taught by licensed teachers, ensuring the highest level of kindergarten readiness," said Langebartels.

Preschool tuition is around $17 per day, but financial assistance is also available for qualifying families through the CCDF and On My Way PreK programs.

Students will attend classes from Monday through Friday for either a half or full-day, and follow the regular MSD school year calendar.

"Spots are limited, so families are encouraged to register soon," said Langebartels. "Interested families who would like to learn more are encouraged to reach out to the school representatives who can answer questions or even provide an in-person tour."

I CAN HEAR, BUT I CAN'T UNDERSTAND

Did you know that the earliest sign of hearing difficulty is often the complaint that "I can hear, but I can't understand." While this type of comment may seem contradictory, it makes a lot of sense to the hearing care professionals at Beltone. In an industry that is often confusing to consumers – our goal is to make patients comfortable in a no pressure environment. At Beltone, our hearing screenings and evaluations are always complimentary. We take the time to get to know you and your medical history and explain the results of your evaluation in an easy-to-understand way.

What you can expect at Beltone:

Great hearing devices: Our advanced digital technology gives you speech clarity with minimal background noise.

Customer service: From day one, we established a set of values unlike anything else in the industry – making your health our number one priority.

Exclusive BelCare: Receive a lifetime of care and service for both you and your device.

Hearing aids are not just to help you hear but are critical to improving your brain's ability to decode speech. If hearing loss is left untreated, speech discrimination drops over time. This is because the part of the brain that decodes speech is not getting any exercise. Like a muscle without exercise, the ability to decode speech will deteriorate, but unlike a muscle, in most cases you can't get it back. This is why it's very important to get a hearing aid when you need one, rather than waiting until you can't hear at all.

P.S. We know there are hundreds of hearing aid advertisements out there promising different things. We see the news stories that talk about over-the-counter hearing aids. We can tell you the truth about "cheap" hearing aids – they don't work very well. At Beltone we are dedicated to finding a hearing solution that is right for both you and your budget!
